Your materials will be reviewed by a committee as the next class of 12 participants is selected. During this pre-screening process, individual applicants are considered based on information provided, as well as an interview with a Golisano Construction Technology Training Program representative.

Participants who are selected to move on in the submission process are then asked to attend a pre-training orientation. This step gives hopeful participants the chance to join the program based on skills and potential. The following areas will be reviewed during this stage:

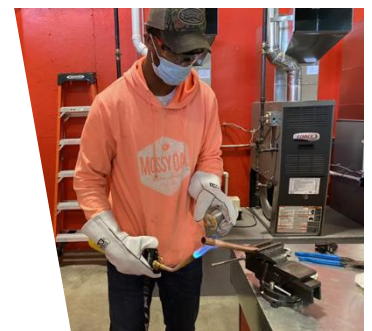

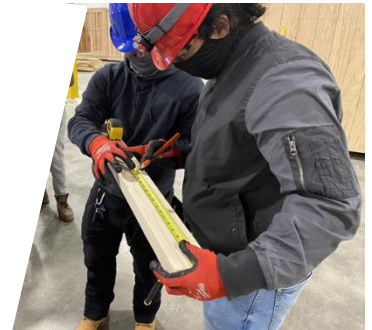

- Ability to follow instructions
- Capability to multi-task
- Teamwork mentality
- Positive attitude
- Ability to act in a safe manner
- Punctuality

Following this step, participants will be contacted directly to provide constructive feedback. If accepted into the Construction Technology program, participants will be notified of start date, dress code and all pertinent information to the program.

The Golisano Construction Technology Training Program selects 12 participants for each class. Up to three alternates may be selected for a waitlist. At the start of the program, there is a one-week probationary period for each participant. This is a time for instructors to assess and evaluate each participant. During the probationary period, wait-listed applicants may be enrolled to fill spots that may become available.

Participants may be asked to leave the program at anytime for any reason at the discretion of the instructors.

Completion of the program does not guarantee a job. All efforts will be made to pair program participants who meet requirements with employment partners.
